Fredrikson & Byron Expands Government Relations Practice to Iowa

Firm News

12.05.2019

Attorney Noah J. Tabor has joined Fredrikson & Byron to lead its Government Relations Group in Iowa.

“We are pleased to expand our government relations practice to Iowa with the addition of Noah to our team,” said Kevin Goodno, chair of the firm’s Government Relations Group. “His background and experience are a perfect fit with our approach to provide comprehensive state government relations services throughout the Upper Midwest government relations practice. With Noah’s addition, our advocacy for our clients now includes Minnesota, South Dakota and Iowa.”

“Fredrikson & Byron is a government relations leader in the region, and I am excited to join the group,” said Tabor. “My depth of experience in the state’s political and policy arena will enable us as a group to serve clients in the coming season.”

Tabor brings more than a decade of political and government relations experience to help clients navigate complex political and policy issues to achieve desired results. Tabor’s in-house government relations background includes a deep understanding of complex areas of healthcare, insurance and government procurements. As a leader in health insurance policy in Iowa and the Midwest, Tabor’s experience advocating for clients in Iowa and other states gives him a unique perspective on how best to achieve client goals in Des Moines. He has led stakeholder outreach campaigns in multiple states to better position clients for successful government procurement processes.

Tabor is actively involved in local, state, congressional and presidential politics. He advises candidates and campaigns on healthcare policy, election law, grassroots engagement and Iowa Caucus strategy. Being not only conversant, but fully engaged, in political mechanisms allows him the ability to translate political mystery into actionable policy objectives for his clients. Tabor is also a licensed Iowa attorney.
