Attorney Kayla C. Hoel has joined Fredrikson & Byron in the Immigration Group. Hoel advises clients navigating the complexities of Immigration law.

Hoel is an Immigration attorney, offering clients strategic support and valuable insights regarding a variety of immigration matters. Her practice includes employment, family and humanitarian based immigration. Hoel has experience working with both corporate and individual clients managing the complexities of the U.S. immigration system.

Prior to joining Fredrikson & Byron, Hoel aided Fredrikson's Immigration Group as a legal clerk, served as a legal intern for the judges of the Bloomington Immigration Court and worked as a research assistant at the University of Minnesota Law School, exploring the intersection of asylum and constitutional law in a global context. She also gained hands-on experience and acumen as a student attorney in the James H. Binger Center for New Americans Federal Immigration Litigation Clinic, arguing cases before the Sixth and Eighth Circuit Courts of Appeals.

Before joining the legal profession, Hoel worked in finance for a Fortune 200 company to support their marketing, sales, supply chain, corporate and global internal audit functions. This financial background allows her to nimbly assist clients with financial complexities that may arise within their immigration case.
